1.2 Context

This document presents the most relevant activities developed between October 1985 and the present date, notably as a member of the following institutions:

- 1985 – Now – Electrical and Computer Engineering Department, Telecommunications Scientific Area, from Instituto Superior Técnico, as part of the teaching staff since October 1985, notably as Stage Assistant from 1985 to 1988; Assistant from 1988 to 1991; Auxiliary Professor from 1991 to 2000; Associate Professor from 2000 to 2003; and Associate Professor with Habilitation since 2003.
- 1985 – 1993 - Centro de Análise e Processamento de Sinais, Universidade Técnica de Lisboa (CAPS-UTL) at Complexo 1 from Instituto Nacional de Investigação Científica (INIC), as a researcher from 1985 to 1993.

Some of the work reported in this document has been partially developed during my stages at the following international institutions:

- Centro Studi E Laboratori Telecomunicazioni (CSELT), Torino, Italy, between June 1988 and August 1991, under the supervision of Dr. Leonardo Chiariglione, developing research in the field of efficient (digital) video coding which was, at the time, an emerging research topic at world level.
- Universidade Federal do Rio de Janeiro (UFRJ), Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, between September 2013 and August 2014, in collaboration with Prof. Eduardo da Silva, developing research in the field of efficient representation of plenoptic visual information, notably light fields.

1.3 Academic and Research Perspectives

1.3.1 Academic

Since 1984, I have been developing my academic career at IST, starting as Monitor at the Statistics course, while I was completing my graduation in Electrical and Computer Engineering. In 1985, I start focusing my academic activity in the Telecommunications domain at the Electrical and Computer Engineering Department. At the start, I lectured several courses in the area of telecommunication systems and telephone switching and, later, I focused in the field of multimedia communications, especially coding of visual signals. Along the years, I always lectured at IST, excluding a few experiences of lecturing abroad (at least for a significant time) in Spain, Austria and Brazil that will be presented later.

I consider that the main role of a university professor is motivating, creating enthusiasm, launching challenges, guiding, inspiring and creating in the students a sense of responsibility. These are not easy objectives nowadays but are certainly the added value that a professor may offer in a classroom regarding the enormous amount of information that is nowadays easily available to the students. It is this 'positive energy' that a professor must transmit to his/her students which, together with his/her personal experience, must bring the students to the lectures and justify their presence in the classroom. This is a role that the new technologies, even the most sophisticated, cannot accomplish and the eternal reason to have live lectures. Naturally, these lectures must involve the students in interactive models and become different from the past 'preaching' models. Because, in fact, the students have at their disposal a growing panoply of information technology devices and applications such as online videos, web pages, smart boards, massive open online courses (MOOCs), etc. These emerging technologies certainly bring added value, notably in allowing easy access to the information, but they may hardly substitute the presence and role of a professor in a classroom to create interest and enthusiasm, stimulate curiosity and creativity, develop critical thinking and logical reasoning, etc.

As a professor in a field of accelerated change as are multimedia technologies nowadays, it is essential that learning is centered on the fundamental concepts, tools and associated systems, before the specific solutions that, at each moment in time, solve the problems. Only in this way it is possible that the new engineers are ready to face the speedy technological evolution that creates new solutions every single day. Naturally, a solid basic formation should facilitate and boost the learning processes, notably by raising the abstraction level that allows to think beyond the 'immediate'.

However, since we are speaking of engineering, this means 'the art of doing', it is also essential 'to see, to believe' and 'to do, to learn', thus creating (practical) experiences. In this context, the concepts must, whenever possible, 'gain reality' to launch bridges to the real world. This aspect is even more critical when teaching multimedia technologies since most signals may be 'seen' and 'heard'. In this multimedia world, the results of algorithms and systems may be visualized or heard and thus the concepts and algorithms gain life and enter the eyes and hears of the students, if it is given them the chance to experiment in a laboratory environment. It is this experimentation that may give the students the connection between the theories and concepts with the practice and the solutions, thus allowing a deeper understanding. For this reason, along the years, I have been complementing the theoretical lectures with practical lectures and laboratory sessions to 'close the circle of understanding'.

Naturally, with time, some of the research activities must gain the necessary maturity to be integrated in the teaching activities, thus renovating and modernizing the courses in order the students are better prepared for the continuously evolving outside world. This process shall establish synergies between research and teaching, which is an essential double-target in a school of excellence.

As a final word, I would like to stress that I see teaching in the context of relations between people, here teachers and students that are jointly leaving an experience. Teaching should not exist disconnected from those persons but should rather happen with those persons. The teacher has the duty to teach but also to respect, help, stimulate, encourage, understand, listen, etc. Only in this way the students may learn and not simply memorize information that will vanish soon. My best example of this attitude is the decision taken many years ago to know the names of all my students, to be able to call them individually by their names, whatever the number of students. This is an easy task if we really want to do it since the names soon become real persons with a face and not just a name on a list. This attitude has been immediately recognized by the students as a sign of respect and rewarded with a deeper relation what is certainly very important for the learning process, especially for the students with more learning difficulties, more shy, etc.

1.3.2 Research

My research (scientific) interests are in the field of visual information processing and representation, and multimedia applications, notably in the following areas:

- Visual information analysis and processing
- Visual information segmentation
- Visual information coding
- Visual information description, retrieval and summarization
- Visual information adaptation for heterogeneous environments
- Multimedia applications functionalities and requirements
- Standardization of representation methods for multimedia information

- Evolution strategies for multimedia applications

While the visual information modalities were initially image and video, along the years they have been extended to light fields, point clouds, meshes and holographic data, as it may be seen in the list of publications.

Along the years, I had/have a very intense participation in standardization committees in the area of multimedia representation, notably in the context of the ISO/IEC MPEG (Moving Picture Experts Group) and ISO/IEC/ITU-T JPEG (Joint Photographic Experts Group) committees. The reasons for this participation are explained in detail in the accompanying document with the Scientific and Academic Project.

3 ACADEMIC ACTIVITIES

This section includes the most relevant information regarding my academic activities.

Differently from the first years of my academic career, in the most recent years I have been lecturing only courses in the field of multimedia communications since this topic has entered the list of courses of a few graduations and the number of students has also grown (this has changed recently for multiple reasons, mostly orthogonal to the courses themselves). This lecturing has happened at both IST campus, notably Alameda and Tagus-Park.

The assessment of the courses made by the students with IST-controlled inquiries has shown that I have been highly scored by the students, notably with continuous classifications as 'IST Excellent Professor' although the courses are also considered rather demanding as mentioned in the annual reports provided by the student's representatives.

- 'Comunicação de Imagem' (Image Communication), Creator and Responsible Professor, Electrical and Computer Engineering graduation, Telecommunications and Electronics profile, Telecommunications Section, Electrical and Computer Engineering Department, Instituto Superior Técnico, since its creation in 1992/93 until 2001/2002 when this course was substituted by the 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' course.

The 'Comunicação de Imagem' course has been delivered, first, as an optional course at the 5th year of the Electrical and Computer Engineering graduation, Telecommunications and Electronics also Electronic Systems and Computers profiles, from 1992/93 to 2000/2001.

When it was created in 1992/93, the 'Comunicação de Imagem' course was a pioneer at world level in the field on digital image and video coding, which was only an emerging topic at that time, far from the very wide adoption that happened after.

- 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' (Audiovisual Communication), Creator and Responsible Professor, Electrical and Computer Engineering graduation, and later Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc., Telecommunications Section, Electrical and Computer Engineering Department, Instituto Superior Técnico, since its creation in 2001/2002 up to now.

In 2001/02, the 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' course has been included in the list of courses of the Telecommunications profile of the Electrical and Computer Engineering graduation.

In 2001/2002, the 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' course was also included in the Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc. (pre-Bologna M.Sc.).

In 2007/08, the 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' course has been integrated in the list of courses of the Telecommunications profile of the Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc.

In 2012/2013, this course started being lectured in the 1st semester contrary to all previous years when was lectured in the 2nd semester.

The evolution of the number of students along the years of the 'Comunicação de Imagem' and 'Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo' courses at Alameda campus is shown in Figure 1. The oscillations along the years on the number of students are mainly related to external factors, notably if the Final Graduation Project was mandatory or not and the related consequences on the number of courses to follow, and also to the overall set of courses offered each year since these were always optional courses.

- ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ (Multimedia Communication), Creator and Responsible Professor, Telecommunications and Informatics M.Sc., Telecommunications Section, Electrical and Computer Engineering Department, Instituto Superior Técnico, since its creation in 2012/2013 up to now; this course happens at the Tagus-Park campus.

The ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ course has been delivered for the first time to the Communication Networks M.Sc. in 2012/2013. This course had as immediate precedents the ‘Comunicação de Imagem’ and ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ in the Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc. and Communication Networks M.Sc.

The ‘Comunicação de Imagem’ course has been offered for the first time as an optional course of the 5th year of the Electrical and Computer Engineering graduation, Telecommunications and Electronics profile as well as Electronic Systems and Computers profile, in 1992/93. This course has been offered until 2000/2002 and was then substituted by the ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ course.

At the Communication Network M.Sc., the ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ course has been offered for the first time in 2005/2006. In 2012/2013, it was substituted by the ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ course. This course continued to be offered when the Communication Network M.Sc. changed its name to Telecommunications and Informatics M.Sc.

In 2018/2019, the ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ course started to be also offered to the Electronics Engineering M.Sc. at Tagus-Park campus.

The evolution of the number of students along the years of the ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ and ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ courses at Tagus-Park campus is shown in Figure 2. The oscillations along the years on the number of students are mainly related to external factors, notably if the Final Graduation Project was mandatory or not and the related consequences on the number of courses to follow, and also to the overall set of courses offered each year since these were always optional courses.

 - Basic telecommunications concepts

- Radio communications systems
- Satellite communication systems
- Image communication
- Communication networks
- Support material for the ‘Comunicação de Imagem’, ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ and ‘Comunicação Multimédia’, Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc., Telecommunications and Informatics M.Sc., and Electronics M.Sc., Instituto Superior Técnico, notably slides for the theoretical lectures, laboratory guides and practical problems about:
 - Analogue TV
 - Facsimile
 - Digital Photography
 - Videotelephony and videoconference
 - Digital TV
 - Digital video storage
 - Digital video broadcasting (DVB)
 - Object-based multimedia services
 - Advanced video coding
 - HDTV and 4k TV
 - 3D video: concepts, tools and systems

Considering the huge evolution of the multimedia representation technologies in the last three decades, the support material to the courses has been revised, improved and extended every single year in order to be always up to date. Moreover, the course syllabus themselves have been also evolving over the years. For example, while analogue TV and facsimile were topics in the nineties, this does not happen anymore with digital TV and 3D systems taking their place in the courses syllabus.

Currently the ‘Comunicação de Áudio e Vídeo’ and the ‘Comunicação Multimédia’ courses only consider digital multimedia representation and systems, from digital photography to 3D systems and including also personal communications, multimedia storage and multimedia broadcasting.

3.4 Student Inquiries

Table 1 shows the results of the inquiries to the students regarding the theoretical, practical and laboratory lectures for the courses lectured after 2010/2011 (since this is the information available at the IST database).

The classification scale is from 0 (lowest) to 9 (highest) and the scores in Table 1 correspond to the average of the following components: assiduity, punctuality, clarity in exposing, security in exposing, capacity to stimulate the interest, availability and development of reasoning and critical thinking.

Following the scores for the pedagogical assessment performed by the IST students shown in Table 1, I got the distinction of “IST Excellent Professor” in all the years considered. In the table, MEEC refers to the Electrical and Computer Engineering M.Sc., METI to the Telecommunications and Informatics M.Sc., and MERC to the Communication Networks M.Sc.

4 RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

This section includes the most relevant information about research activities.

4.1 Context and Research Interests

After concluding my graduation on Electrical and Computer Engineering in 1985, I decided to do my M.Sc. in the same field, now with focus on telecommunications, more specifically on the emerging domain of digital image and video communication. My M.Sc. Thesis was developed in the area of bi-level image coding where I implemented the CCITT Group 3 and Group 4 bi-level image coding standard algorithms in a Texas Instruments TMS320 digital signal processor (DSP), which was then the fastest DSP on the market. This project has definitively marked my entrance in multimedia world, notably in the domain of efficient visual information representation.

Still before discussing my M.Sc. Thesis, I found myself, in June 1988, in Torino, Italy, more specifically at Centro Studi E Laboratori Telecomunicazioni (CSELT), at that time the research center for the main Italian telecom operator. The goal was to start my Ph.D. in the emerging field of digital video coding, a very hot topic in 1988. The selection of this research center for my Ph.D. (when Italy was clearly not a common destination for Portuguese Ph.D. students) was closely related to the fact that the leader of the team where I should be integrated was Dr. Leonardo Chiariglione, an emerging (not to say dominating) personality in the field of multimedia representation standardization for the three decades to come; in fact, Dr. Chiariglione is still nowadays a (the ?) major player in this field.

Precisely in 1988, the Moving Picture Experts Group (MPEG) was created under the auspices of the International Standards Organization (ISO) and the International Electrotechnical Commission (IEC), and the leadership of Dr. Leonardo Chiariglione. Along the following decades, the MPEG video and audio coding standards would change the world, not only from the media technologies point of view but also from a social point of view, following the huge success of multiple services and applications based on MPEG standards, notably digital music, digital TV, DVD, Internet and mobile streaming.

Due to this context, I have been personally with MPEG since the very early days and a large part of my Ph.D. work was driven by the MPEG objectives for video coding. In 1991, I participated, at CSELT, in the design and implementation of the first world prototype of a video decoder compliant with the MPEG-1 Video standard, targeting the storage of digital video, coded at around 1.1 Mbit/s, in Compact Discs (CD) and Winchester discs.

The MPEG connection is going to have a large impact in all my scientific career. Since 1992 (after my Ph.D. in 1991), I have been developing intense activity, at European and world levels, in multiple research and development projects directly or indirectly connected to the standardization of multiple representation methods, where MPEG has become the reference.

Along the years, I assumed almost all roles within MPEG, notably the important role of MPEG Requirements Subgroup Chair. Later, after stopping my MPEG participation, I also become JPEG Requirements Subgroup Chair, making me the single person in the world who has both led MPEG and JPEG subgroups, naturally not at the same time.

This standardization intense participation has been very beneficial for my research activities and also for my academic activities since it has allowed the direct and privileged contact (as Requirements Chair) with the goals, processes and technologies of most of the world top companies and research institutions in the field of multimedia representation. This would certainly not have happened with the same intensity if I was not in that role.

However, strategically, I always tried to put my research topics a step ahead of the standardization topics, notably addressing the topics which would become standardization topics some years later or, alternatively, addressing non-normative tools for the standards under development, which standards need to be efficiently deployed. This has allowed me and my research team to avoid the very high speed of the normative standardization activities as well as working on less interesting 'optimization details' while focusing in unveiling the next technologies before they are relevant for standardization.

To avoid becoming too dependent on standardization activities, I have also had an intense involvement with other organizations, notably IEEE and EURASIP, especially in terms of journal editorships and conferences organization. This involvement has a more direct connection with my research activities in more fundamental topics, less standardization related. It is in this context that some of my research were born, notably video segmentation, distributed video coding, quality of experience assessment, and plenoptic data processing and coding.

4.2 Collaborations

Along the years, many national and international collaborations have been established in multiple forms, durations, topics and objectives. These collaborations were born in multiple contexts, notably European projects, international standardization groups, notably JPEG and MPEG, conferences, IEEE, etc. Some of them may have faded away from my memory but others, because of their duration or impact, may be easily listed:

1. Universitat Politècnica de Catalunya (UPC), Barcelona, Spain, Prof. Luis Torres, in object-based video coding and distributed video coding.
2. École polytechnique fédérale de Lausanne (EPFL), Lausanne, Switzerland, Prof. Touradj Ebrahimi, in visual representation, quality of experience and quality assessment.

4.6 National and International Standardization Activities

The standardization activities have had, with no doubts, a major impact in my career. This connection was established during my Ph.D. when Dr. Leonardo Chiariglione, at the time my Ph.D. supervisor and leader of the research group where I was working in Italy, created the most important standardization committee in the history of multimedia information representation, this means the ISO/IEC Moving Picture Experts Group (MPEG). This committee has developed most of the multimedia coding standards at the basis of most digital multimedia communication and storage systems and services and has, certainly, made a huge impact on our society and the way humans communicate nowadays.

In this context, I had a very intense participation in the MPEG committee, where I took many roles, from simple researcher to the top leadership, notably MPEG Requirements Subgroup Chair. Later, I played the same role in the ISO/IEC/ITU-T Joint Picture Experts Group (JPEG) committee. With this double MPEG-JPEG involvement, I became the only person who has been in the top MPEG and JPEG leadership, notably as Requirements Subgroup Chair.

This participation had many benefits, starting with the frequent, easy and privileged contact with the technologies and visions of the most important companies and research centers in the world in the multimedia field. This privileged contact, which was beneficial not only for me but also for my students and research team, was happening mainly in my role as MPEG and JPEG Requirements Subgroup Chair, where I was supposed to listen, analyze and assess the standardization requests and needs of these institutions, as well as their strategic visions, to decide which standardization projects and initiatives should be launched.
